Chapter 1 by Anna Cook

I would really like to say that Victoria's suicide was completely unexpected. That no one saw it coming. But sadly, that isn't true. As she got meaner, she got more depressed. And now I know why she shared my secret. She was insecure. And because she was suffering so much she took it out on me. And she wanted me to feel her pain. But now I understand it all. I understand that something happened to Victoria during her year in Antarctica. Something that changed her. And I still don't know what it is, but what I do know, is that you can't always blame people for changing because it is not always in their control. Sometimes we just can't move on. I am not going to tell you what the secret is that she shared, because that is irrelevant. But what I am going to tell you, is that there is 9,072 miles from America to Antarctica. And that is how many times my heart aches for Victoria every day.
